Three little pigs. Three little pigs, yow!

Once upon a time there were three little pigs. One day they went boppin on their own. Their mother said you're big pigs now and all grown up. Go out and build yourself a happy home. But please remember; build your house safe and strong. That big bad wolf may come along. Big bad wolf. Big bad wolf.

The first little pig was lazy and he built his house of straw. Then one day that wolf came creeping up to call. Little pig, little pig. Let me come in. Not by the hair of my chinny chin chin. Then he huffed and he puffed and he puffed and he huffed and he blewww. He blew the house in. The first little pig split then ran to join the second little pig.

The second pig didn't listen and he built his house of sticks. Soon that wolf came by, licking his hungry lips. Little pig. Little pig. Let me come in. Not by the hair of my chinny chin chin. Then he huffed and he puffed and he puffed and he huffed and he blewww. He blew the house in. The two little pigs boogied on out of there and joined the third little pig at his house.

The third little pig worked hard and he built his house of bricks. But the wolf came by up to his old tricks. Little pig. Little pig. Let me come in. Not by the hair of my chinny chin chin. He huffed and he puffed and he puffed and huffed and he huffed and he puffed and he puffed and he huffed, but he could not...He couldn't blow the house in. Whew that wolf was mad. He pulled at the windows. He knocked at the door. He stomped his feet. He pulled at the windows. He knocked at the door. He stomped his feet. He tried digging through the floor. Then he climbed up to the rooftop, down the chimney he dropped, into a pot of boiling water he plopped. Whew, that wolf was out of there man. He ran and he ran and he was never seen again.

And the three little pigs lived happily ever after.
Three little pigs. Three little pigs. Three little pigs, yow.
Three little pigs. Three little pigs. Three little pigs, yow.
